PEOL #3: The F Word

Neel Jaisud
9/21

Firoozeh Dumas is an Iranian immigrant who wrote "The F Word" to describe the struggle faced to fit in by Iranian immigrants into the US. Dumas talks about how her "first and last names together generally served the same purpose as a high brick wall" (Dumas 64). She uses metaphor to contrast her expectations with the American point of view and reactions. This creates an atmosphere of realization for the reader, who sees how immigrants are disadvantaged by American culture. The terror of her foreign last name creates a link to her world and Iran before her migration, while the vehicle, a "high brick wall", shows how that culturally important name is met with refusal to understand or judgement.

(9/10) NICE, NEEL!

Rhetorical Analysis

Neel Jaiswal

(Ethos) ← references pop culture ("noone [w/o] mask and a cape has a z in this name")

Tone:
- self-deprecating, ironic

Mode:
- narrative, humorous,

Claim
Having a foreign name in America is a challenge

Appeals
- sense of humor

Rhetorical Devices:
- simile: "same purpose as a high brick wall"
- metaphor: "become one big knot"

Context
- Iranian Revolution
- meant

(Logos)

(Pathos)
← the "x-ray glasses"