The Australian Youth Organisation (AYO) is a government funded organisation dedicated to improving the musical talents of Australia's next generation. The blog entry provided is posted on the official website as a concert review of one of the AYO's recent performances. This blog post, written by a reviewer, ~~Caitlit~~ Caitlin ~~Caitlin~~ Annesley, details how she was ~~the~~ thraughly ~~impp~~ impressed by this performance. ~~Caitl~~ ~~Caitlin~~ Annesley ~~Caitlin~~ uses various ~~syntactical~~ techniques such as ~~hyperboly~~ hyperbole, imagery, and juxtaposition to further her point that the work of the AYO is impressive, not just for their age, but in general, and have a bright future ahead.

One of the devices Annesley uses is hyperbole, which ~~helps her~~ furthers her point that the AYO is impressively good. She uses phrases like "musical G-force," (Annesley 6) "daredevil solo ... otherworldly," (Annesley 10), and "pulled into a ~~world~~ universe of music" (Annesley 20) to create a sense of awe at the sheer skill these musicians possessed. The hyperbole used in the text shows how the AYO is impressive, not just for a youth orchestra, but as compared to any orchestra. The hyperbole helps Annesley convey her ~~as~~ amazement and disbelief when she first heard them play by creating deliberate parallels to certain points in comparison to people's expectations of a youth orchestra. Ultimately, Annesley's use of hyperbole helps her demonstrate her point that the AYO is comparable to a ~~profffe~~ professional ensemble, and is not something to be understated.

Annesley also uses ~~imagery~~ to ~~het~~ paint a picture of the concert and her experience hearing them play. Images form in the readers mind, of "frightening intensity," (Annesley 89) an "otherworldly [and] brazen" (Annesley 10) ~~++~~ solo that "produced smiles from... colleques," (Annesley 10-11) and "gorgeous sound ~~above~~ across a huge dynamic range" (Annesley 15). By ~~emphasis~~ using consistent imagery and evocative language, Annesley ~~to~~ creates a visual representation of the article that impresses on the reader the scale and beauty of the concert. The scene that she creates ~~to~~ contributes to expanding her point and improving the reader's perspective on said orchestra ~~to~~ to demonstrate the skill that the AYO has and shows. Her emphasis on (?) imagery ~~and synesthesia~~ helps ~~her create a world~~ the reader understand how the concert felt ~~as they~~ to the reviewer and why Annesley believes the AYO impressive in general, not just as a youth orchestra.

Overall, Annesley uses a juxtaposition of the students age versus their musical talent and ability as a motif throughout the post.

Be consistent?

- lots of hyperbole
- fancy, eloquent words
- better imagery
- juxtaposition
- sort tries to draw reader in and get them impressed/interested

Notes

Thesis

T: Ayo National Music Capp 2024: Concert Review 1

A: Caitlin Annestey

C: she is a reviewer for the AYO (and so might be a bit biased)

A: general public, children wanting to join/be in AYO

P: show how the AYO is amazing at what they do and have a bright future ahead, and how children who play already should join

AC: sense of awe, hyperbole, framing as something impressive "for an orchestra", juxaposition

I: these students are impressive and like good in general, not good because they're students
